MATT JUUL, NATIONAL FEATURES EDITOR

From director and screenwriter to author and comedian, John Waters has worn quite a few hats over the years. However, this weekend the legendary artist and pop culture icon will once again put on Santa's hat for the return of "A John Waters Christmas," which has become an annual tradition thanks to its fun and subversive take on the holiday season. We chatted with Waters about the hit show, the politics of giving gifts and what he really thinks about the Elf on the Shelf craze.

1 Hundreds of scantily clad runners will take to the streets of Boston on Saturday for the return of the Santa Speedo Run. See the festive fans brave the cold while raising funds for the Play Ball! Foundation.

'Mowgli' is the most authentic version of 'The Jungle Book' yet

Director Andy Serkis also reveals whether the film is for kids or not. GREGORY WAKEMAN

Like most people who have laid eyes on "The Jungle Book," "Mowgli" director Andy Serkis is a huge fan of Disney's 1967 take on Rudyard Kipling's collection of short stories.

Yet, as such an avid fan of Kipling's work, Serkis always wanted to make a darker version of "The Jungle Book" that was more authentic to the author's 1894 release. So in 2013, when Warner Bros. put a script in the burgeoning director's hands, that was all he needed to immediately set aside his plans to adapt George Orwell's "Animal Farm" and put all of his efforts into "The Jungle Book."

"This script was a much different take. One that is much closer to the book," Serkis tells Metro. "It is a Mowgli-centric story, and covers much darker themes about otherness, self-discovery and how you fit into the world — a shifting and changing world, too. It was a really much more complex and psychologically involved story."

As Serkis points out, "Mowgli: Legend of the Jungle" is also the first to put the titular character at the center of the story.

"With the other adaptations, Mowgli has almost been left out. It should be his central story. But in actual fact, there has been a lot of emphasis on the terms and actions of the animals. They become the central focus. I think that in the past, Mowgli and his journey, his rite of passage, hasn't been fully explored."

Even though Serkis is more than happy with his take on the story, there was a problem. Jon Favreau and Disney were making their own "Jungle Book" movie, one that was an adaptation of the

Rohan Chand as Mowgli and Nisha (voiced by Naomi Harris) in "Mowgli."

1967 animated film.

Serkis insists that because Favreau's version "was just coming into being" when they began pre-production, it never impacted what they wanted to do. In fact, it made the "Lord Of The Rings" star even more convinced that he had to strictly adhere to the source material.

Return to the jungle with "Mowgli." ALL PHOTOS: NETFLIX

"It has been a challenge, the preconception of what this story is and what the characters are," says Serkis. "If you ask most people what their memories of 'The Jungle Book' are, they automatically talk about the 1967 version. A lot of people don't even know that the book exists."

"So it was with that in mind that we wanted to get back into the tone of the book," he adds. "Which is much more plugged into a certain period. Its culture is specifically set in India. It is a real emotional journey. There is humor, too. But it is a harsher world."

It's not too harsh, though, as Serkis keenly insists that his "Mowgli: Legend of the Jungle" is "not like an R-rated version." In his opinion, "You can't take your four- or five-year-olds to see it. But you can probably take your eight-year-olds."

But that didn't stop Serkis from diving into the darker themes of the story, to make sure that the plight of Mowgli would resonate with a modern audience.

"I did want it to resonate with modern audiences, in a world where we are living in a fractured society. Where so many people are wondering, 'How do I fit in?'" says Serkis. "There are millions of refugees being displaced, teenagers don't know how to interact because they are isolated behind screens or not communicating. It seems to me a very relevant and very modern-day piece."

"Mowgli: Legend of the Jungle" debuts Dec. 7 on Netflix.

on the Shelf and the politics of gift-giving chat about the show, the politics of gift giving and what he really thinks about the Elf on the Shelf craze.

How has the Christmas show evolved over the years?

It's probably more political this year because it's impossible not to be. But all humor is political. Christmas is political. What you give people for Christmas is a political decision. And it's also what can really wreck family traditions, especially this year when there's a civil war going on in the country, basically, half and half. Nobody's going to change anybody else's mind. People are dreading going home this Christmas. So I'm telling everyone to bring a whistle, a little whistle that you pass out to everybody and anytime anyone mentions politics, you blow the whistle. That way, you can get through Christmas and everybody will end up laughing.

I'll have to try that with my family.

It's so exhausting. Christmas is exhausting enough without politics on top of it. You know, I'm political, believe me, and I think Christmas almost has to be political because what we want in our stockings, what we want in our presents, what we want as gifts, what our message would be is political. But I'm not a separatist. I make jokes about both sides.

Do you have any tips for navigating office Christmas parties?

I did think up a sexual act that you can do at one, but you'll never be able to print that in your paper. It's called a snowman and you have to come to my show to find out how to do it. And it can only work in cold weather, so you can do it in Boston. I think office parties, first of all, you have to be careful in an office anyways. My friend told me, in her office, you can't even say to someone, "Nice dress," because then if someone complains you have to hire a counselor to come in to train them about sexual [harassment], how you deal with everybody. It's not an easy time to ask someone for a date. And when liquor's involved at the office, I would tell you, "Bring a lawyer."

You're a big proponent of giving books as gifts. Do you have any book recommendations for this year?

I'm a big fan of Rachel Cusk. I really like her novels. And I like obscure books that you find in collectable shops especially. I collect vintage porn. Like before pictures it was books with hilarious titles. I collect ones that are literary adaptations like instead of "Elmer Gantry" there's "Thelma Gantry." "Summer and Smoke" is "Sin and Smoke." I had one, "Clockwork Orange" was, of course, "Clockwork Orange." I collect them, and they're hard to find. Or

"Santa's snitch is something I'd be against. I think all the bad little boys and girls should team up and make an enemies list of all the bad adults this year. Or who's Santa to judge? Take your list and shove it."

John Waters

You've said in the past that a gift card is a terrible Christmas present. It is unless ... I wouldn't mind a Bitcoin gift certificate to the dark web.

Are you big into Bitcoin?

No, but that's the only way you can buy things on the dark web, isn't it? So I think that would be a very cool gift for a young person, a Bitcoin gift certificate to a HANSA Market — I think they shut that one down — but all the different ones that I would have no idea [how] to get. But I'm always impressed by people that know that. I respect hackers. They're the new juvenile delinquents.

What's the worst gift you've ever received?

Someone gave me a gift card to Starbucks. I felt like saying, "I can afford a cup of coffee." It's like embarrassing to pull out this thing. It doesn't have the political punch of food stamps. ... Another thing I always say every year is I really hate when someone sends me a gift basket. I can afford a pear, for Christ's sake. Gift baskets should have things in them that you would never buy for yourself like cigarettes or porn or out-of-circulation poppers.

What's your take on Elf on the Shelf?
What is up on a shelf? What do you mean?

It's basically a toy elf that some parents use as a way to keep their kids behaved around Christmas, saying that it's "spying" on them for Santa.

So it's a snitch. Well, that wouldn't go over in Baltimore. That would never be popular in Baltimore. Santa's snitch is something I'd be against. I think all the bad little boys and girls should team up and make an enemies list of all the bad adults this year. Or who's Santa to judge? Take your list and shove it.

Meet the Boston competitors on this season of 'Top Chef'

Adrienne Wright and Brian Young talk representing the Hub on the hit series. MATT JUUL

Adrienne Wright.

"Adrienne and I really developed a friendship," Young tells Metro. "It was really great to have somebody you could directly relate to."

"Bostonians have to stick together," says Wright.

Although neither chef was born in Boston, both have embraced the city over the years and hope to make locals proud with their performances.

"I'm psyched," says Young. "It's always kind of Boston-versus-everybody for me."

"The thing that separates Boston from everyone else is the community we have in the restaurant industry," he adds. "We support each other."

Cultivar's Chef De Cuisine Brian Young and Adrienne Wright, executive chef at Boston Urban Hospitality — the group behind hot spots Deuxave, Boston Chops and dbar — are set to throw down in the kitchen when the show returns Thursday night. As the only competitors from Boston's food scene, Young and Wright quickly formed a friendship while filming in Kentucky.

After college, she worked her way through kitchens from Connecticut to Maine, eventually finding a home with Boston Urban Hospitality. Wright fell in love with the city's food scene and praises its "level of quality" when it comes to the amazing ingredients and products that she gets to work with each day.

As for Young, the Nashville native was actually on track to be a rocker before becoming a chef, having worked with a number of punk bands as a singer. Young got involved in the culinary world after landing a job as a food runner at a B.B. King's Blues Club as a teen.

"Not everybody wants to hire a kid with spiked blue-and-black hair," Young jokes. "But in kitchens, they didn't care."

STANDING UP AT SIT-DOWN CONCERTS!

I am writing to complain about my attendance at a concert. On Saturday, Dec. 1, while at Madison Square Garden in NYC, I attended the Ne-Yo and Keyshia Cole concert. During the concert, the group in the row in front of me stood up for 76 percent of the concert. They were rude and when asked to sit down, they said they paid for their seats and they wanted to stand up. Well, they paid for seats and they should have sat in them. Finally, another attendee got frustrated and told them to sit down and they finally did. If you wanted to stand up during the entire concert, please attend a concert with no seats. Others want to enjoy and, more importantly, see the show.

SITTING ON THE SUBWAY STEPS

My complaint is about the idiots who sit on the subway stairs, oblivious to the people going up and down the steps. Not only do they block traffic, they also pose a tripping hazard for people who have to go around them.

With hundreds of thousands of people using them daily, there probably are very few places in the universe as filthy and germ-y as the subway steps. Why anyone would want to touch them is incomprehensible to me.

THE IMPORTANCE OF HAVING A GOOD DAY

Simply making it through the day in one piece can be hard. For those who struggle with mental illness, even the simplest days can be difficult. Starting today until Friday, Dec. 14, Suffolk University in Boston will be hosting the Good Day Project — daylong events to help people who may have a harder time than others. Started by a campus mental health advocacy group, the Good Day Project will be setting up selfie stations to help students and other attendants to improve their own self-image, and will provide blank cards for people to fill with positive messages to pay the good vibes forward. It's good deeds like this that can help someone out of the depths of an awful day and turn it into something positive.

Please remember to send your Humbles to humble@metro.us. These submissions can be acts of gratitude, positivity or kindness that you have seen throughout the day.

REUTERS IMAGE

The former president will be laid to rest in Texas.

Former President George H.W. Bush was hailed at his state funeral on Wednesday as a warrior-statesman of uncommon personal kindness who went from being a hero of American conflicts to representing a bygone era of civility in politics.

Amid an unusual bipartisan spirit at the service at the Washington National Cathedral, both Republican and Democratic politicians honored a president who called for a "kinder, gentler" nation.

Bush, the 41st U.S. president, died last week in Texas aged 94. He occupied the White House from 1989 to 1993, navigating the collapse of the Soviet Union and expelling former Iraqi President Saddam Hussein's forces from oil-rich Kuwait.

"George H.W. Bush was America's last great soldier-statesman," Jon Meacham, a presidential biographer, said in a eulogy. "He stood in the breach in the Cold War against totalitarianism. He stood in the breach in Washington against unthinking partisanship," he said.

At a ceremony full of pomp but also peppered with laughter, the capital's current political feuds were briefly set aside in honor of the late president, a naval aviator who survived being shot down by Japanese forces over the Pacific Ocean in World War II, and a former head of the CIA during the Cold War.

A patrician figure, Bush was voted out of office in part for failing to connect with ordinary Americans during an economic recession.

But he has been remembered as representing an earlier era of civility in American politics, that image burnished in recent years by the divisiveness and anger in the United States that accompanied the rise of President Donald Trump.

Former President George W. Bush said his father "valued character over pedigree, and he was no cynic. He'd look for the good in each person, and he usually found it."

"The best father a son or daughter could ever have," the former president said in his eulogy, his voice cracking with emotion as he spoke near his father's flag-draped coffin.

Taking his seat at the cathedral, Trump shook hands with his predecessor, former President Barack Obama, whom he has often sharply criticized.

Democratic former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, Trump's 2016 election opponent, and her husband, former President Bill Clinton, shared the front pew with Trump, Obama and their spouses.

Trump, like Bush a Republican, infuriated the late president by attacking his sons, George W. Bush and Jeb Bush, a rival in the 2016 Republican primary campaign.

Trump sat mostly motionless next to first lady Melania Trump throughout much of the service.

He had tweeted earlier that he was "looking forward to being with the Bush family. This is not a funeral, this is a day of celebration for a great man who has led a long and distinguished life. He will be missed!"

Bush did not endorse Trump in the 2016 presidential election. He did not publicly say whom he voted for, but a source told CNN at the time that he had voted for Hillary Clinton. REUTERS

Cardi B announces breakup with husband Offset on Instagram

In a 42-second video on social media, the rapper said she is seeking a divorce after failing to reconcile with Offset.

Rapper Cardi B announced on Wednesday she is seeking a divorce from her husband Offset after just over a year of marriage, saying, "I guess we just grew out of love."

In an Instagram video, the "Bodak Yellow" singer, one of the biggest names in the music industry this year, said although she and Offset were good friends and business partners, "things just haven't been working out between us for a long time."

Cardi B, 26, and Offset, 26, a member of rap trio Migos, married secretly in September 2017 and had a child in July.

"It's nobody fault. I guess we just grew out of love but we are not together anymore. I don't know. It might take time to get a divorce and I'm going to always have a lot of love for him because he is my daughter's father."

Cardi B

"It's nobody fault. I guess we just grew out of love but we are not together anymore. I don't know. It might take time to get a divorce and I'm going to always have a lot of love for him because he is my daughter's father," she said.

She captioned the video, "There you go ... peace and love."

Offset responded to her Instagram post with the comment,

"Y'all won."

Cardi B has reached success in the past year with hit singles "I Like It," "Girls Like You," with Maroon 5, and the Bruno Mars collaboration "Finesse."

The singer's brand of female empowerment and sexuality won three American Music Awards and three MTV Video Music awards earlier this year. She is expected to figure highly in Grammy nominations to be announced on Friday.

Fame has also brought run-ins with the law. On Monday, a New York judge threatened to issue an arrest warrant after she failed to appear in court on an assault charge over a strip club fight in August.

In September, Cardi B was pictured leaving a party in New York with a large bump on her head after throwing a shoe at rival rapper Nicki Minaj. REUTERS for the Patriots in

sports@metro.us

The Patriots earned one of their more impressive victories of the season in Week 13, topping the Vikings 24-10 to improve to 6-0 on their home field. With all eyes looking ahead to a Week 15 showdown in Pittsburgh, New England has to be sure not to overlook this Sunday's challenge against a divisional foe. Here are three things to watch for when the Patriots face the Dolphins in Miami:

Will the defense continue to take elite steps forward?

The win over Minnesota was the signature performance of the season for Bill Belichick's defense. Not only did they hold one of the most talented offenses in the NFL to a mere 10 points, they shut down arguably the best wide receiver duo in the league.

Adam Thielen and Stefon Diggs combined for just 77 yards on 10 catches, although Thielen did haul in the Vikings' lone touchdown of the game. Keep in mind this duo has already topped 2,000 yards on the season. The Patriots got fantastic pressure on the quarterback, sacking Kirk Cousins twice and forcing him into a pair of interceptions. On top of strong open-field tackling, the secondary is what really shut down this elite receiving duo.

Tom Brady and the Patriots pounded Miami at Gillette back in early October, 38-7.

GETTY IMAGES

Per Pro Football Focus, Stephon Gilmore and Jason McCourty rank as the first and seventh-best cornerbacks in the NFL this season, respectively.

Surrendering just 11.5 points per game since the bye, look for the defense to stay on top of its game

Sunday in Miami.

Does the offense need to start preparing for life without Rob Gronkowski?

The short answer to this question is yes. Gronk is no longer himself, and it's not just because he only caught three passes for 26 yards against Minnesota. He's slower getting down the field. He's less physical with defenders. He's even committing more penalties than we're used to seeing.

The game against the Vikings was tied at 10 until late in the third quarter, but it was actually Josh Gordon's downfield ability that ignited the second-half offense. Gordon is being used more sparingly since Gronk's return, but has caught all eight of his targets since, including three grabs for 58 yards and a touchdown last week.

When the Patriots acquired Gordon, it was as a bonus piece to their offense. At this point, he's looking more like a necessary piece to keep the offense on track.

Will playing in Miami be a trap game yet again?

Trap game might be the wrong word here, because the Patriots are well aware of just how poor they've been in Miami. The Pats have lost four of their last five down in South Beach, including a 27-20 loss last season on Monday Night Football. But it's not like this trend is anything new — Tom Brady's just 7-9 as a starter on the road against the Dolphins.

While Miami are 6-6 on the season, good enough for second place in the AFC East, it is just 2-4 over their last six games. The two wins during that span are ugly home wins against the bottom half of the division — 13-6 vs. NYJ and 21-17 vs. BUF.
